"MERELY JESTING." IBANEZ EXPLAINS

Meant No Disrespect to American Women—"Treat 'Em Rough" New to Him.

NEW YORK, March 3.—Vicente Blasco Ibanez, famous Spanish novelist, was greatly exercised over the adverse sentiment that resulted from his views on American husbands. He was reported as saying that American wives should be "treated rough." Yesterday he said: "I consider it an abuse of confidence that any publicity was given to what I said as a guest at the University Club in Philadelphia. "When I deliberately gave an interview, it was another matter. The conversation which took place at the University Club was all in the spirit of pure jest. "I had visited Bryn Mawr College a few days before, and some one asked me what my impressions were. I declared that they were very good, indeed, and that the spread of higher education among the women of America was a remarkable thing.

In Spirit of Fun. "From that the conversation went on to include comment upon the fact that for the most part culture in America is largely in the hands of its women, and that in this matter conditions in Europe are entirely different. All the conversation was light and jesting, as was natural to men in the relaxation of afternoon tea in the prevalent spirit of fun I joked about the wife who waits at home with the rolling-pin for her errand spouse. "No one present spoke Spanish, and there was only a limited understanding of French. That also helped in this unpalatable misunderstanding. "The novelist declared with vehemence that he needs no intermediary to state his views regarding American women. He declared:

Respects American Women. "They have their faults and virtues, like all others. I have great respect for them. My impressions will make their appearance in due time in the pages of some novels that I have in mind. "Treat 'em rough" was an especial source of grievance to Ibanez. He did not know its meaning—had never even heard it, he declared.

FLIER MAKES LANDING IN CRIPPLED AIRPLANE

First Successful Flight Completed By Plane Without Use of Elevators.

The first landing ever made by an airplane without the use of the "elevators" was successfully made last week by the test pilot of the 104th Aero Squadron while he was testing a new Le Pere combat machine. Flying level at an altitude of 1,000 feet he pushed the control stick ahead to dive for the landing field. The ship did not respond. A pull back, which should have turned the nose up, left it still flying level. The pilot, "suddenly interested," according to his description, found that he was without the use of his elevators. It later proved that the small steel band around the stick, to which the elevators are attached, had snapped.

The plane was tail heavy, the result being that it flew level with the motor turning 1,450 revolutions per minute. "Heavy mental activity" by the pilot brought him to the decision that the plane could be brought into a dive by gradually throttling down the motor and that it would again level out when the motor was turned full on.

It took him several minutes to work up courage to throw the ship into a dive, from which it was doubtful it would ever come out. Then came a period of agonized waiting while the motor went full on. Slowly the ship righted itself. A mile back of the field he dived again, with the motor throttled down to 1,200 revolutions. At an altitude of 300 feet he pushed the throttle up bit by bit and with miraculous luck the ship came back to earth. The plane made a smooth two-wheel, tail-high landing.

Now all Le Peres are equipped with a triple thickness band around the stick.

SPANKING MACHINE USED BY COP ON BAD CHILDREN

Juvenile Court Officer at Brighton, N. J., Turns the Crank and Barrel Staves Do the Rest.

BRIDGETON, N. J., March 3.—The mayor's official juvenile court in this town consists of policemen weighing 150 pounds with large biceps and a jovial disposition who wield an instrument which has potential force in preventing juvenile delinquency. This instrument is known as the "spanking machine" and during the last seven years many boys and girls, too, have undergone treatment. For a time the mayor's system of chastising boys and girls was kept a dark secret, his police never mentioning it and those who went through it considering it too mere a subject for mention. However the secret is out now.

Mayor Arthur J. Whitacre has explained the idea. "The spanking machine savors in no wise of the old whipping post," he said. "It is not an implement of torture but for beneficial chastisement. No small offender is ever spanked without permission of his or her parents. "The 'spanking machine' consists of an assortment of barrel staves selected to fit the victim's particular anatomy and operated by a strong-arm policeman. Of course, the idea is not popular with bad boys, but I believe it has done a great deal toward bringing wayward boys and girls to time."

COURT FAVORS INDIANS.

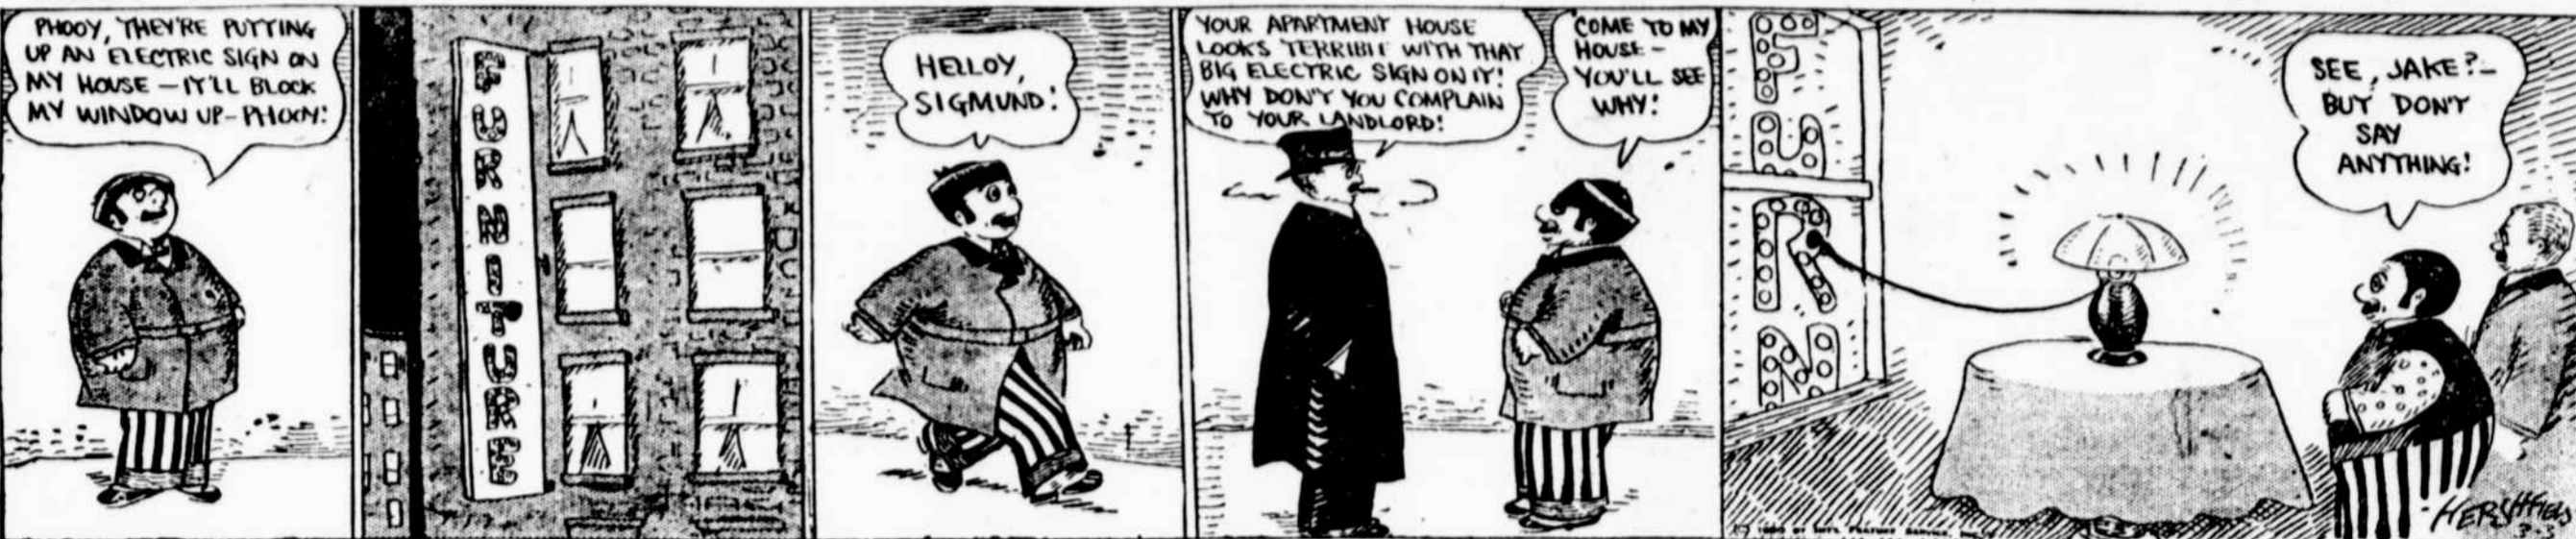

Holding that certain lands in Montana surrendered by the Crow Indians to be lands held in trust for the Indians, the Supreme Court yesterday decided that the Johnson Company could not graze sheep on these lands as though they were public lands.
